I am getting an error Type'string' is not assignable to type'string'. in the constructor of my type. My code is as follows: export default class BarChartData extends Component { constructor(props: any) { super(props); //code } I know this error happens because of string (as the error message suggests) but how do I fix this? Is there a way I can configure string to be assignable to the type of data I want to pass to it? A: Turns out there was no error at all, the TypeScript had an error in the constructor, the class definition should be as follows export default class BarChartData extends Component { constructor(props: any) { super(props); //code } and if you want to enable "noImplicitAny" typecasting you need to add the flag in the tsconfig.json "noImplicitAny": true, 1854 in architecture The year 1854 in architecture involved some significant events.
